

Medieval Worlds

Code of Conduct and Best Practice

Medieval Worlds is an online open-access journal with a double-blind peer review system. The publication of a manuscript is expected to follow standards of ethical behaviour for all parties involved in the act of publishing: editors, authors and reviewers.

The editors, the boards and editorial staff must not disclose any information about a submitted manuscript to anyone other than the author and reviewers (including potential reviewers). The members of our international advisory board and of our editorial board help the editor in the search for and choice of external reviewers.

Editors should evaluate manuscripts solely for their intellectual content without any bias to race, gender, sexual orientation, religious belief, ethnic origin, citizenship, or political philosophy of the authors. They should not consider reviewing manuscripts in which they have a conflict of interest.

Material from submitted, unpublished manuscripts should be kept confidential and must not be used by others without the express written consent of the author.

Authors are requested to warrant that their article is their own original work, which does not infringe the intellectual property rights of any other person or entity, and cannot be construed as plagiarising any other published work, including their own previously published work.

Proper acknowledgment of the work of others must always be given. Authors should appropriately cite or quote publications that have influenced the content of their work. The corresponding author ensures all named co-authors' consent to publication and to being named as a co-author. All persons who have made significant scientific or literary contributions to the work reported should be named as co-authors. Others who have participated to a lesser extent should be acknowledged or listed as contributors.

Authors must disclose all sources of funding for the research reported in the paper. They must declare any potential conflict of interest – be it professional or financial – which could be held to arise with respect to the article.

Authors who discover a major error in their own published work, are required to notify the publisher or editor and assist with withdrawal or correction of the manuscript.

Authors should not submit manuscripts with essentially the same content to more than one publication, except if expressly communicated and agreed.

By submitting an article to Medieval Worlds authors declare that the manuscript is complete and that the exploitation rights to the work have not been exercised elsewhere either fully or partially.

Authors have to confirm that they possess the copyright and/or right to use all parts of the work; this especially applies to images in the work.

Reviewers are asked to return their reviews within six weeks. They must not show or discuss the contents of the manuscript with others. The purpose of peer review is to assist editors in making editorial decisions and possibly also to assist the author in improving the paper through editorial communications.

Material from submitted, unpublished manuscripts should be kept confidential and must not be used by others without the express written consent of the author. Reviewers should not consider reviewing manuscripts in which they have a conflict of interest.

Reviewers are expected to express their opinions objectively. They should avoid statements damaging to the author's reputation. Criticism should be directed against the work, not the author.

Reviewers should identify relevant published work that has not been cited by the authors. Any statement that an observation, derivation, or argument had been previously reported should be accompanied by the relevant citation. A reviewer should also call to the editor's attention any substantial similarity or overlap between the manuscript under consideration and any other published work of which they have personal knowledge.

Medieval Worlds adheres to the COPE Code of Conduct and Best Practice Guidelines for Journals (<http://publicationethics.org/resources/code-conduct>).
